Upon completion of deal, deal site owner exports buyer list as a .CSV document and conveys it to merchant

- Deal site owner exports full buyer list from the Zuupy CrowdDeals dashboard as a .CSV document that can be printed and mailed or sent through email to the merchant
- Each transaction has a unique transaction ID. Each transaction ID comprises two parts: a first part issued by PayPal and another 6-digit part. Both parts are separated by a hyphen. Transaction IDs that have identical first parts belong to one single transaction (i.e. a purchase with multiple deals or multiple quantities in the shopping cart).

You're receiving this redemption voucher because you bought one of our deals.

To redeem deal, buyer prints out white-label redemption voucher with unique transaction ID that is emailed to her

- Upon and after tipping of deal, buyers receive an email containing a white-label redemption voucher and instructions to print said redemption voucher.
- Multiple-deal or multiple-quantity purchases will have unique transaction IDs and separate vouchers, i.e. a 5-deal single purchase will yield 5 different vouchers for the buyer. Merchants are advised to keep track of all vouchers redeemed and advise their customers to counter-sign against each redeemed entry in the merchant's buyer list.

During redemption, merchant verifies any redemption voucher against the buyer list received from the deal site owner

- Merchant needs to check for matching transaction IDs, amount paid, currency, date and time, name, and email address to verify that such payment has indeed occurred.
- Merchant can then either use a physical printed buyer list and mark out redeemed transactions or make changes in a soft copy to indicate a redemption.
- The voucher redemption process is complete. ■
